The Cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris, was founded in 1162 on the site of an older church. During the Revolution the edifice was converted into a "Temple of Reason," and much damage was done to the interior. In 1802 it was re-opened by Napoleon I. as a place of worship, and during the reign of the third Napoleon considerable restorations were carried out. The towers shown in the picture are 220 feet high, and one of them contains the celebrated bell, "Bourdon de Notre Dame."
